Social Sciences: What’s the Big Deal About Data? The Promise to Fix the World
With the powerful new data tools available in the 21st century, can we really finally fix the world’s greatest problems like hunger, disease, and poverty? The success of such initiatives as the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation’s focus on eliminating malaria in Africa gives donors enormous optimism. Is there any cause for coupling our optimism with caution? Presenter: Hannah Stewart-Gambino, professor of government & law and international affairs

Natural Sciences: The Joy of SET: Writing Book About Mathematics with the Family
The card game SET, which is popular with students of all ages, has deep connections to mathematics. We will talk about some of those connections, how to play the game, and how it turned into a family book-writing activity (book to be released in October), with parents and adult children behaving reasonably well throughout. Presenters: Gary Gordon, Marshall R. Metzgar Professor and mathematics department head; Liz McMahon, professor of mathematics

Engineering: Coffee and Chemical Engineering
Coffee is an immensely popular beverage around the world, but there is a lot of work performed as it travels from crop to cup to capture its most desirable flavors and aromas. This talk will provide an overview of some of the general considerations taken into account throughout that journey, as well as how common chemical engineering practices come into play to make that perfect brew. Presenter: Joseph Woo, visiting assistant professor of chemical and biomolecular engineering

Humanities: Writing Matters: Lafayette Students on Writing for College
We have all heard warnings about a current or impending literacy crisis: “Students can’t write!” This is shorthand for a variety of complaints, many of which blame digital technology for a perceived decline in writing ability. When students talk about their writing (and reading) experiences, a different picture emerges. This talk looks at what findings from an ongoing study of Lafayette student writers. Presenter: Bianca Falbo, associate professor of english

Humanities: From Dickens to Game of Thrones: The Power of Serial Narrative
In the 19th century, many popular novels that are now considered classics were published over periods of 12-24 months, either in magazines or in separate parts. We will look at the way in which today, television serials such as Breaking Bad, The Wire, and Game of Thrones continue the same tradition of suspenseful storytelling. Presenter: Alison Byerly, president of Lafayette College
