Branch Out and Explore

Family Weekend 2017 | Sept. 22-24
LAFAYETTE
Welcome to
FAMILY WEEKEND 2017

The 2017 Lafayette Family Weekend Committee is thrilled to welcome you to Lafayette College. In following this year’s theme, we encourage you to “branch out and explore” all the wonderful opportunities available to you. Embark on a tour, learn from our dynamic professors, discover something new on campus or nearby, and experience your student’s close-knit community on our beautiful grounds. Our committee has worked tirelessly to plan a weekend full of activities and events for you and your family to enjoy. Have a great weekend, and Go ‘Pards!

Self-guided tour booklets will be available at the Registration desk.

1:30–2:30 p.m. | President’s Address | Farinon College Center, Marlo Room
Are you curious about initiatives Lafayette is launching to enhance the student experience and the College’s progress toward becoming affordable for more families? Join President Alison Byerly as she touches on these topics and many others during her Family Weekend address, an annual highlight of this special weekend. President Byerly will welcome questions at the conclusion of her remarks.

2 p.m. | Women’s Volleyball: Lafayette vs. Army | Kirby Sports Center

2:45–4:15 p.m. | 'Pard Talks | Colton Chapel
In the style of TED Talks, speakers will have 15 minutes to present their topics. Join us for these innovative and informative discussions on cutting-edge research and important issues from faculty members representing the four learning divisions at Lafayette. Presentations are:

Social Sciences: How People Manage Appearances Strategically
How do people act in front of others to gain their favor or “win” them over? This talk will address the topics of individual impression management, deception, and persuasion through a sociological lens, and cover how people strategize presenting self-serving images to others. Presenter: David Shulman, professor of anthropology and sociology

Natural Sciences: Decoding Dyslexia
Dyslexia is a specific impairment in processing written language despite adequate intelligence and educational background. Affecting 5-17 percent of school-age children, it has far-reaching social and economic consequences. Early detection and intervention will help to close the gap between typically developing and reading-impaired children in acquiring reading skills. Lafayette students are currently working on a project examining the link between genes, cognition, and behavior in an attempt to decode dyslexia and perhaps develop a low-cost tool for early identification of reading impairment. Presenter: Lisa Gabel, associate professor of psychology and neuroscience

Humanities: Lafayette Architecture in Context
Lafayette’s campus features a wide variety of architectural monuments. These buildings physically define the College and connect to global traditions in architecture. We will examine the contextual basis for our built environment. Presenter: Robert Mattison, professor of art

Interdisciplinary: Butterflies, Bees, and Owls: How to Have a Positive Impact
Seeing butterflies flit between flowers, eating fruit pollinated by bees, or hearing an owl hoot in the forest are things that most of us enjoy. However, many bee, butterfly and owl populations are decreasing. We’ll briefly address the problems these creatures face, examine what Lafayette is doing to protect the habitat for them, and share what you can do at home to have a positive impact. Presenter: Marie Fechik-Kirk, director of sustainability

Engineering: Let’s Go Break Some Stuff
Materials Engineering studies the relationships among the structure, processing, and properties of materials. For example, while uncooked spaghetti is brittle (it will shatter if dropped), the same noodles become ductile (bend without breaking) when cooked. Is a glass rod brittle or ductile? Are you sure? What about a rubber hose? Is it easier to bend an aluminum rod or to unbend it? Are you sure? Let’s break some stuff and see how changes in structure and test conditions alter the properties of materials. Presenter: James P. Schaffer, professor of chemical and biomolecular engineering

For more information on the programs listed above, visit the Family Weekend website.
2:45–4:15 p.m. | Historic Easton Tour
Bus departs from Williams Center for the Arts

Exhibits

WILLIAMS CENTER GALLERY—WILLIAMS CENTER FOR THE ARTS
Buckminster Fuller: Architect, Engineer, Inventor, Artist
Buckminster Fuller re-imagined the world as we know it, from the houses we live in to the cars we drive. His ability to think across disciplines, connecting the worlds of science, engineering, architecture, design, and art, was one of his most important and lasting contributions. This exhibit centers around the Inventions: Twelve Around One portfolio published in 1981.
Friday: 11 a.m.–5 p.m.
Saturday and Sunday: Noon–5 p.m.

GROSSMAN GALLERY—WILLIAMS VISUAL ARTS BUILDING
Sam van Aken: Streuobstwiese
A tantalizing introduction to Streuobstwiese, van Aken’s project to establish orchards of heirloom fruit trees. Streuobstwiese, evolves out of his “Tree of 40 Fruit” projects, in which heiroom orchards were preserved by collapsing them onto a single tree through the process of grafting.

In November 2016, van Aken was joined by members of the Lafayette and Easton communities on the Karl Stirner Arts Trail to plant a Stanley Prune Plum. This tree will serve as the base—over the next three years budstock from 40 different heirloom and antique stone fruit trees will be collected from local orchards and grafted to create a unique “Tree of 40 Fruit” for Easton.
Friday and Saturday: 11 a.m.–4 p.m.

REFERENCE COMMONS—SKILLMAN LIBRARY
Community, Literacy, and Activism in Islamic Africa: The Paintings of Yelimane Fall
The calligraphic art of Yelimane Fall, a Senegalese artist and community activist, whose work reflects a vibrant West African aesthetic, featuring large curvilinear Arabic letters, robust forms, and bright colors.
Daily: 10 a.m.–10 p.m.

SIMON ROOM—SKILLMAN LIBRARY
Breathe for Those Who Cannot: Remembering Al-Mutanabbi, Street of Booksellers
Recent works by book artists commemorating and celebrating the spirit of Al-Mutanabbi Street at the heart of Baghdad’s historic literary and intellectual community, which was badly bombed on March 5, 2007, at the midpoint of the Iraq War.
Daily: 10 a.m.–10 p.m.
ALLAN P. KIRBY SPORTS CENTER
Friday: 6 a.m.–midnight
